That's about to start changing thanks to a company called OpenOffice. "OpenOffice is the answer to Microsoft's problems," the chief executive of OpenOffice Labs, John Ramey, wrote in a blog post announcing that he is moving his corporate office from the OpenOffice suite to GoOffice. "We've built OpenOffice because we need to. We've been using it for a long time! This new experience will help we deliver a better customer experience than OpenOffice." In the blog post, Ramey also shared that the new version of OpenOffice will look more familiar to existing users, using a consistent theme – that of a "classic office suite." To give you more insight into how the new version will work, Ramey also listed off some of the features coming to the GoOffice suite that he expects to Video..
